Fewerback, and Minster, are those from which they are mostly exported. The authorities do not connive at this atrocious business; on the contrary, they make the most vigorous efforts to suppress it, and the men who take the girls, (called laudloafer, or vagabonds,) whether with or without the consent of their parents, are punished, when detected, in the severest manner. Some of them are said to have amassed twenty or thirty thousand dollars by this iniquitous traffic in a few years. According to one of the journals which describes this most monstrous of slave trades, it is a custom of the laudloafer to buy up debts which poor, sim ple-hearted peasants owe, and then give them the alternative of su ng their o ters to go to America or Australia, holding out the prospect of what in Germany is a Raspberry, and Pine Apple Gum Drops, just handsome annual income.
